Be the Boss Everyone Wants to Work For: A Guide for New Leaders -- October 14th

One of the hardest transitions in any leader's career is the one from a high-potential individual contributor to his or her first formal leadership position.

Not enough time, effort, resources, and support is given to first-time managers. In fact, a recent CareerBuilder survey showed that almost 60% of first-time managers receive no training when they become managers for the first time.

In this session, Bill Gentry will share insights from his research at the Center for Creative Leadership on first-time managers which will help set a foundation for the success of any first-time manager and strengthen any organization's pipeline of leaders.

President's Message

Each year we look to hear from you, our members through the Annual Survey. What do you think? Where can GOOD Network improve? What are we doing well? Look for the survey email in your inbox on October 17th. Please complete it before November 1st. Your feedback will help the 2017 Leadership team as they guide us through another great year together.

Rob Rogers, 2016 President
